From the Editorial Board

April's verdant awakenings and May's sunlit warmth have together woven a season of stewardship, gratitude, and joyful growth at our school. As spring unfurled its promise, classrooms and grounds became sanctuaries of green inspiration and collective purpose; as warmth arrived, care, courage, and creative play carried that energy into meaningful learning and memorable moments.

Dear Parent,

This spring term invited our community to cherish the planet, celebrate those who nurture us, and stretch into new skills with confidence and compassion. April called us to mindful stewardship: Earth Day and related activities turned awareness into action through assemblies, garden planting, and creative expression. Children from Pre-Primary upward took part in Earth Day assemblies with eco-pledges, songs, and the symbolic planting of real seeds. Inter-House Nature Competitions showcased budding orators as Nature's News Reporters and moved audiences with Monologue Masters, where students embodied trees, rivers, and winds to stir eco-passion across houses. Our DEAR (Drop Everything And Read) sessions nurtured future readers and storytellers, while Eclat — our signature event — transformed recycled waste into striking artworks and green innovations that blended advocacy, artistry, and action.

May continued the momentum with celebrations of care, movement, and discovery. Mother's Day events filled classrooms with heartfelt tributes—cards, poems, and performances that honoured caregivers and deepened family bonds. Our Sports Races encouraged balance, agility, and teamwork via ball-balancing and obstacle races that cheered resilience and healthy competition. The Summer Camp opened its doors to music, art-and-craft, dance, gymnastics, skating, supervised swimming, and introductory computer sessions, offering safe, stimulating spaces for children to explore interests, build skills, and grow in confidence.

June brought a calm, reflective cadence to our year—a month to renew our commitment to the planet and to wellbeing. Our focus shifted from active spring growth to mindful maintenance: caring for the environment we planted earlier and tending the mental and physical health of our children as exams and summer routines approach.

Thank you for your unwavering partnership in nurturing our eco-visionaries.

Warm regards

Hearts That Teach

Small Habits, Big Changes

"Your future isn't created in a single moment—it is written in the little choices you make every day."

Imagine two students. One studies just 15 minutes daily, while the other keeps saying, "I'll start tomorrow." At first, the difference seems invisible. But days turn into weeks, and weeks into months—and suddenly, one is confident and prepared, while the other is stressed and struggling.

Our daily routine is like a mirror—it reflects who we are becoming. A habit as simple as waking up early can bring discipline. Reading a few pages every day can open new worlds of knowledge. Even choosing to stay positive during tough times builds strength from within.

These habits may look tiny, but just like drops of water fill an ocean, small actions shape a big future. Every time you choose consistency, you are quietly building success.

So, don't wait for a perfect day. Start small. Start today. Because the habits you choose now are the story your future will tell.

Growing Beyond Marks:
Nurturing Happy and Confident Learners

In today's fast-moving world, education is no longer only about textbooks, homework, and examinations. True learning happens when children are encouraged to explore, question, create, and express themselves freely. Every child enters the classroom carrying unique dreams, talents, and abilities, and as teachers, it is our responsibility to help them discover their potential with confidence and joy.

A classroom should be more than just a place for academic learning—it should be a space where curiosity blooms, mistakes become lessons, and every small achievement is celebrated. Whether it is solving a difficult Maths problem, participating in an assembly, planting a sapling, or helping a friend, each experience contributes to the holistic growth of a child.

Today's students need not only knowledge but also life skills such as kindness, teamwork, creativity, resilience, and empathy. Encouraging children to read more, play outdoors, communicate confidently, and spend meaningful time with family helps build emotionally strong and balanced individuals.

As educators and parents, when we work together with patience, positivity, and encouragement, we create an environment where children feel safe, valued, and inspired to do their best. After all, education is not just about preparing children for exams—it is about preparing them for life.

Why sports are important in students' life?

Sports matter for students because they build healthier bodies, sharper minds, and stronger character—all at once.

Physical health: Regular activity improves heart health, strength, coordination, sleep quality, and helps maintain a healthy weight. It also reduces long-term risk of diabetes, hypertension, and depression.

Mental health: Exercise releases endorphins, lowers stress and anxiety, boosts mood, and can reduce symptoms of ADHD by improving focus and self-regulation. Academic benefits: Students who are active often show better concentration, memory, and executive function, which can translate into higher attendance and improved grades.

Social skills: Team sports teach communication, cooperation, leadership, empathy, and conflict resolution. They also create a sense of belonging and school spirit.

Life skills: Sports foster discipline, time management, resilience, goal-setting, and learning from failure—transferable to studies and careers.

Healthy habits for life: Early positive experiences with movement make students more likely to stay active as adults.

Equity and opportunity: Sports can provide mentorship, community connections, and—in some cases—scholarships and pathways to further education.

Tips for students:
Aim for at least 60 minutes of moderate-to-vigorous activity most days.
Mix cardio (running, cycling), strength (bodyweight, resistance), and mobility (stretching, yoga).

Prioritize enjoyment—pick activities you like so you'll stick with them.
Balance sports with academics using a simple schedule and recovery (sleep, hydration, nutrition).
