Social Emotional Learning (SEL): Building Emotionally Intelligent Classrooms Where All Students Thrive

A workshop on 'Social Emotional Learning (SEL): Building Emotionally Intelligent Classrooms Where All Students Thrive' was conducted by the Headmistress Ms. Salila Shashikant on 29th May 2026. The objective was to help educators understand how stress impacts the brain and how Social Emotional Learning competencies can improve learning outcomes, reduce behavioural issues, and create a calmer classroom environment.
The resource person explained that SEL is the process where students develop 5 core competencies:
1. Self-Awareness: Understand emotions & strengths
2. Self-Management: Regulate emotions & behaviour
3. Social Awareness: Empathy & perspective-taking
4. Relationship Skills: Communication & collaboration
5. Responsible Decision-Making: Make ethical choices

She explicated that the core challenge isn't just 'content delivery'. It's managing emotions, behaviours, and conflicts. Explaining further she said that each of us has a part of the brain that helps us to think better, manage our emotions and helps us in daily survival.
1. Thinking Brain: Decision-making, reasoning, impulse control
2. Feeling Brain: Emotions, relationships, memory
3. Survival Brain: Fight-Flight-Freeze response

When stressed, Survival Brain is active, while the Thinking Brain "goes offline" and students can't problem-solve or focus or deal with their emotions. So, before teaching, we need to help students get their Thinking Brain back online by addressing emotional state. Calm first, teach next.

Through various SEL tools like Emotion Movement games, Emotional Check-in, Feelings Vocabulary Wall, PAUSE Protocol, Walk in their Shoes, it was explained how strong SEL actually saves teaching time by reducing disruptions, results in fewer behavioural issues, faster conflict resolution and enable students to learn better and stay engaged.

The workshop highlighted that academics + emotions cannot be separated. Participants got practical ways to help students regulate emotions before teaching content. When students feel safe and regulated, learning becomes faster and deeper.
